

Is there a hell, does the devil exist, or do we go to heaven when we die?

I Was Raised Catholic, It Had A Huge Influence On Me Growing Up So, What I Want To Know Is... Is There A Hell, Does The Devil Exist, Or Do We Go To Heaven When We Die?

— John Williams, Seattle, Washington, USA

This is a very emotionally charged subject for people. Many people do not like the answers I give to these things. Nevertheless, death feels wonderful no matter who you are, no matter what you have done in your physical life. Even though it is easy to get caught up in lack of awareness and therefore crave the linear justice of default karma, heaven or hell, there is no punishment or reward waiting for you in the form of a life or place once you die, regardless of what you have done in this life.

Heaven and hell are both concepts that manifest in the physical dimension. They are right here on earth. Hell is not a place, it is a state of mind that becomes the suffering you are living, being created and drawn to you by law of attraction. It feels terrible because it is the farthest resonance you can find in the opposite direction of resonance with Source.

Hell is not a resonance that is compatible with Source, it is the feeling of being completely unaccompanied by Source in the thought that you are thinking and the things that you are doing. It is still subject to the law of attraction, but you cannot find resonance with Source in that moment. This may seem like a paradox because, you create with your mind, and what you think about ... IS and therefore, if so many people are thinking of hell, it is logic that then it must be.

However, the entire purpose of physical life, and the physical dimension in general, is to help Source know itself by becoming exactly what it is we dream up for it to be with our wanting. And NO ONE truly wants things that are the vibrational equivalent of negative. Those vibrations simply exist in the physical dimension, as well as in thoughts coming from the physical dimension, to cause us to clarify and therefore focus on what we want the universe to evolve into.

And so when we die, all there is, is what we have wanted. When we are alive living in "hell", all there is, is the focus on what we do not want. Hell is a concept that belongs to those searching for justice from a space of very limited understanding. Hell is what people who try to find security in forcing the external world to be one way or another, use in the attempt to scare people into good behavior and away from bad behavior.

But as long as any negative emotion, such as fear, is the motivation to do or not do something, that motivation does not come from a pure energetic vibration, and therefore it is not genuine and it is not lasting.

The devil is also a character that does not exist. Like hell, the devil is a fictional idea, a thought form that is projected from the mind of people who are physically manifested. It is a concept, like hell, that was invented by the human mind (not Source mind) as a tool in social and political affairs in order to control others with fear, as well as relieve one's self of responsibility.

At the time that the concept of the devil came about, many leaders sought to gain power through religion. And as such, all non believers, infidels, and heretics (people who were thought to threaten total control) were to be associated with the devil and made to be the enemy of “God”, as well as a threat to the eternal souls of others. This meant immediate condemnation by association for those thought to be in contact with the devil.

And even though the association was assumed, it was believed that their souls would go straight to hell. Much like the death penalty which is still a practice of modern society today, they were put to death under the belief that they would meet with justice in hell. And that death is the worst thing that could happen to a person. When in all actuality like everything else that is manifested physically, they simply were put to death only to re join the unfiltered, transcendental positive energy and vantage point of Source.

Death is in fact a far, far cry from the worst thing a person can experience. If the majority of people knew that however, they would most likely stop condemning our most hardened criminals to it. As you can probably guess by now, heaven, like hell, is also not a place. Heaven is a state of mind that becomes from the bliss you are living in your physical life, which is the direct result of your thoughts. Heaven, is a state achievable by those who are able to follow the north star of their own emotions so consistently that resistance to that guidance is not felt within them. It is the state, while you are living, of holding the closest energetic resonance to that of Source.

And, yes... it is the feeling you will all have once you die.
